Essays

There are two required essays based on Douglas Linder's website Famous Trials <https://www.famous-trials.com/>

For the essays you are asked to compare the trials of Socrates and Jesus based on the original sources and background historical materials provided by this site. Both essays will be based on arguing for or against the idea that "opposition to the state was the cause of the trial and execution of Jesus and Socrates"

Essay One at least 1500 words due October 28, 2019 (20%)

This essay is a preliminary one which focuses on investigating the historical sources for our knowledge of the two trials. Its purpose is to show that historical accounts must be based on documents that are as close to the events described as possible. Even so they are interpretations based on the preconceptions of their compilers and also those of the present-day reader.

Briefly describe the two trials including their dates, where they took place (Greek city-state, Judea-province of Roman Empire, the occasion for the two trials and why historians think they are important events).

Go to the Trial of Socrates and read the apologies of Plato and Xenophon. Based on these accounts determine as best you can what were the accusations against Socrates. As far as you can tell, were Plato and Xenophon biased in their accounts. How can you tell?

Then read the four accounts given in the Gospels of the Trial of Jesus. What were the charges against Jesus? Do they agree with one another or are there any significant discrepancies? What are their biases? In this respect compare the non-Christian account of the Roman Tacitus which is earlier than the Gospels and determine according to Tacitus what the charge was against Jesus and who ordered Jesus's execution.

Why were the apologies of Plato and Xenophon as well as the Gospel and Tacitus's accounts written. Are the sources for the trial of Socrates more informative than those describing the prosecution of Jesus? Why can trial records be a useful historical source? Reading other parts of the respective trial sites, e.g. Questions and Answers for Jesus's trial can help you with criticism of the sources.

Essay Two at least 3000 words (40%) due on December 2, 2019

The second essay pursues the theme "opposition to the state was the cause of the trial and execution of Jesus and Socrates" It seeks to answer the question as to why in both the case of the official Greek and Jewish temple religion opposition to it was regarded as a serious political crime.

Briefly describe the nature of Greek city-state religion. Did Socrates believe in God? To what extent was philosophy a threat to the state religion?

How did the political issues in Athenian politics affect the trial of Socrates? The interview with I.F. Stone on the website is particularly helpful.

At the time of Jesus the official Jewish temple religion was faced with a number of rivals. What were they? Did the Jews cooperate or resist the Roman conquerors? To what extent was Jesus a rebel?

For all these question the website of James D. Tabor, The Jewish Roman World of Jesus is extremely helpful portal. (<http://religiousstudies.uncc.edu/people/jtabor/>)

The essay should begin with a thesis statement of about half a page elaborating your view of the relationship between Greek and Jewish religion and politics and in particular your view of the statement "opposition to the state was the cause of the trial and execution of Jesus and Socrates". It should then endeavor to answer the above questions in an organized manner. The essay should end with a summary of your conclusions and comment on the historical significance of the martyrdom of Socrates and Jesus.

Essays may be re-written and submitted prior to the last day of class.
